“The Grady Nia Project is very unique and offers difficult, and much needed services, to a largely marginalized and underserved population. Inherent in the struggles of this population, beyond chronic mental illness, are the complications of poverty and lack of resources. When we are fortunate enough to find supervisors, mentors, and providers willing to serve this population, the purpose is defeated if patients are not able to make it to their appointments.

I support the Marta program at the Grady Nia Project not only because it helps patients in dire need get to their services, but because it also provides hard-working students an excellent and rare opportunity to train with this tough clinical population. Hopefully, some trainees spread the goodness and continue to serve the underserved upon their graduation. Each dollar I donate goes a very long way for many people.”
